CANFIELD PRACTICALLY ADMITS PROHIBITION HAS FALLEN DOWN

But Lays Blame on State and Local Officials—Says He Works Hard—As For Talking, He Has Issued "Only Two Small Statements This Year"—Shows How Everybody Agrees With Him Except District Attorney Traver.

Palmer Canfield, Jr., of this city, Federal Prohibition Enforcement officer for the state of New York, has written a letter to District Attorney Frederick G. Traver in which he seeks to answer Mr. Traver's criticism of the way in which Federal Prohibition officers are (or are not) enforcing the Federal Prohibition Law, whose enforcement is popularly supposed to be part of the duty of Federal officers, especially of the Federal Prohibition Department.

Mr. Canfield answers Mr. Traver's statement that "the head of the United States Prohibition Department in this state has repeatedly made the statement, in substance, that Congress never intended to enforce the Prohibition Law except in certain localities, like ports of entry, such as the city of New York," by saying that Mr. Traver misquotes him "unfairly and unjustly," and calls attention to what he said in substance in one particular speech recently delivered in Albany. But, says Mr. Canfield, if he is wrong, President Harding was wrong, the attorney general is wrong and the United States Supreme Court is wrong, because they all have said what he said.

As for the criticism that the Prohibition Department has not failed to embrace every opportunity to enforce Prohibition by talk, Mr. Canfield says that such criticism is "absolutely untruthful," and in proof of his assertion says he has issued "only two small statements pertaining to and in explanation of prohibition matters this year." He also tells how hard he works, giving "more hours of intense and concentrated effort to my job than any official of Ulster county."

Without answering the statement made by District Attorney Traver that the public does not get "something for nothing" either in law enforcement or anything else, and that "unless the necessary funds are provided, for the payment of actual expenses, either by taxation or otherwise, little can be accomplished," Mr. Canfield quotes from a statement issued by the district attorneys of the state who are in favor of a state prohibition law that employment of Federal agents "would entail an enormous annual expense," and their logical inference that state enforcement would not cost anything.

Mr. Canfield does not admit the statement of Mr. Traver that ninety-five per cent of the liquors seized in the port of New York are seized by the Customs Department under the direction of Collector of the Port Philip Elting, but says the Prohibition Department has no boats to combat smuggling, and that such service was transferred to the United States Coast Guard Service after he had recommended it. He does not say whether the Coast Guard or the Customs Service ever combated smuggling before his recommendation was made.

Mr. Canfield's letter in full is as follows.

March 3, 1924.

Hon. F. G. Traver,
District Attorney,
Kingston, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Traver,

Your letter to the President of the Village of Saugerties in reference to the National Prohibition Act under date of February 25, 1924, and published in the Freeman February 29, 1924, has been called to my attention by many persons, both personally and by letters, including an official.

I do not desire to take exception to your remarks therein contained except to the extent that you misquote me and make incorrect and unfair statements. When you make the statement, "amazing as it may seem, the State Prohibition Director, the head of the United States Prohibition Department in this State has repeatedly made the statement, in substance, that Congress never intended to enforce the Prohibition Law except in certain localities, like ports of entry, such as the City of New York," you misquote me unfairly and unjustly. What I stated in my address at the State Law Enforcement Conference called by the Governor was that it is primarily the duty of the Federal Government to enforce this law, as other Federal laws, from the standpoint of smuggling by way of water and land from other countries and in relation to interstate traffic, and by preventing diversion from bonded warehouses and distilleries and in conspiracy cases reaching into several states. If I am wrong in such statement, former President Harding was wrong, the Attorney General of the United States is wrong, and the United States Supreme Court is wrong, because they have all said the same thing in almost the same words.

I also stated that it is primarily the duty of State, County and Municipal enforcement officials and officers to enforce the National Prohibition Act from the local and state standpoint. If I am in error, former President Harding was in

Smith's Method Not Machold's

Albany, N. Y., March 4.—The split between Governor Smith and Speaker Machold was widened today by the governor's grade crossing elimination recommendations which were included in a special message to the legislature last night.

YES, WE HAVE NO SPECIAL AUTO EDITION TOMORROW.

But There'll be More About Automobiles Than You Ever Read.

But for the fact that The Freeman does not publish special editions the paper on Wednesday might be termed a special automobile show edition as it will contain a large and varied amount of information about automobiles, general and specific. This matter will not appear on any special page or pages, but will be scattered all over the paper and anyone who reads and carefully considers all of it will know more about automobiles than any one person really ought to know. Of course, there will be an advertisement or two in the paper and the usual run of news will not be neglected, as all of the special automobile information has been gathered and prepared in advance.

Official Introducer Is Secured, Assures Show's Proper Opening

Mayor Block will introduce Prohibition Director Palmer Canfield, who will formally open the Automobile Show in the armory on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. The introduction will be a mere formality as Mayor Block says Kingston folks know Mr. Canfield, for eight years mayor of the city, as well as they do the present mayor, and he needs no introduction. But speakers are always introduced and the mayor is the official introducer, so the formalities and proprieties will be observed. After the introduction Mr. Canfield will proceed to tell what he knows about automobiles, politics, prohibition, hooch, or any other thing that he feels moved to discuss and describe. No topic has been assigned the speaker and he will be at liberty to wander over and through anything he chooses. Nobody knows what he will talk about, but whatever it is it will be worth listening to.

Of course the show will be informally open all of Thursday afternoon, the only formality being the purchase of an admission ticket at the door, and there will be just as much to see then as after the formal opening. There will also be music in the afternoon—instrumental by the orchestra and chin by the salesmen.

State Income Tax Reduction Passes Assembly And Takes Effect Immediately When Governor Signs It

Will Reduce Payments Due By Middle of Next Month Twenty-Five Per Cent, Totalling $8,000,000.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, N. Y., March 4.—Governor Smith today had before him the bill he recommended to provide for a 25 per cent reduction in the state income tax. He is expected to sign it today or tomorrow. The bill will become effective the moment it is signed.

After being assailed as a "political measure" the bill was passed in the Republican Assembly at an early hour today, 106 to 35. It was passed in the senate two weeks ago.

The governor estimates the bill will save New York state income taxpayers $8,000,000 on their 1923 incomes, payable up to April 15. Provision is made in the measure to have the taxpayer make the deduction.

Forty-six Republicans, including Majority Leader Simon L. Adler, of Rochester and Assemblyman McGinnies, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, joined with the Democrats in voting for the bill.

Attack on the measure was led by Assemblyman Davison of Nassau, Clayton of Kings. Steinberg of New York, Stone of Onondaga, Jenks of Broome, Esmond of Saratoga, Kaufman of New York and Boyle of Suffolk.

An amendment to the bill, offered by Assemblyman Clayton, which would have substituted increased exemptions in place of the reduction, was defeated 93 to 48. The amendment would have raised the exemption for single persons to $2,500 and for married persons to $5,000.

Both Republican and Democratic party leaders virtually admitted today that the passage of the tax reduction bill will probably be the most important enactment of the 1924 session. Governor Smith and Speaker Machold are deadlocked on many of the other administration recommendations.

Ice Harvesting Finished Today

With about 24,000 tons of ice in each of the houses at Flatbush and Esopus the Knickerbocker Ice Company today finished the work of harvesting ice from the Hudson river field. Flatbush was finished Monday and today winds up the harvest at Esopus. While it had been expected to fill the East Kingston house conditions were such that no ice was harvested there. Monday at Flatbush the ice had grown so soft that two horses went through the ice, but were gotten out safely. The warm weather is playing havoc with the ice fields in the Hudson river, and the ice is in such condition that it was not believed wise to harvest it after today.

Smith Out of Ills. Primary

Withdraws, It Is Believed, on Condition That Delegates to Convention be Uninstructed—McAdoo Only Candidate Left.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Springfield, Ill., March 4.—William G. McAdoo was the only Democrat in the Illinois presidential preferential race today following the withdrawal of Governor Smith of New York.

The McAdoo forces have a full slate of delegates in the primary while the Smith supporters have none. The sending of an uninstructed delegation to the Democratic national convention was endorsed by the party's Illinois advisory convention and the Smith withdrawal was believed to be in line with this policy.

Smith's name was entered in the Illinois primary without his consent, according to his supporters.

The field in the race for the Democratic national convention for senator was also narrowed today with the withdrawal of James Hamilton Lewis of Chicago. Lewis, who is in Mexico City, was unable to file a withdrawal affidavit in compliance with the primary law, but his telegraphic notice of withdrawal was accepted.

A. M. Sprague of Chicago and William McKinley of Chicago, were the remaining candidates for the Democratic senatorial nomination.

BURNS, IN RAGE AT WALSH'S QUERIES, DEFENDS COURSE DURING OIL SCANDAL

He Is Censured by Senators For Lack of Cooperation—Younger McAdoo Was Told Palmer Was Counsel for Fall and Sinclair.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 4.—Wrangling and shouting marked a tempestuous session of the senate oil investigation today—a session which saw William J. Burns, chief of the department of justice's secret agents, defending his agents and explaining the department's connection with the great oil scandal.

Notwithstanding the tumult which featured the testimony of Burns and one of his agents, Mrs. William O. Duckstein, wife of one of E. B. McLean's employes, the committee made some progress in clearing up the tangled web of mystery that has shrouded the developments of the last few days.

Burns was severely criticized by senators for his alleged failure to investigate various phases of the oil situation, and for his attitude toward the committee's investigation.

The controversy between Burns and Senator Walsh, Dem., Mont., became so heated at times that Senator Lenroot, Republican, of Wis., had the greatest difficulty in maintaining order among the crowd that filled the committee room to overflowing.

Aside from this quarrel, the spectators were given another sensation when Francis T. McAdoo, son of William Gibbs McAdoo, candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, declared E. B. McLean, newspaper publisher, had told him that A. Mitchell Palmer, former attorney general in the Wilson administration, was counsel for ex-Secretary of the Interior Fall and Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome.

Palmer previously testified before the committee that he had represented neither Fall nor Sinclair.

In view of McAdoo's statement, Senator Dill, Republican, Washington, announced that he probably would demand Palmer's reappearance before the committee.

Burns came to the witness stand smiling, confident he could show there was nothing that could reflect in the McLean code messages to his discredit. He left it on the verge of rage, his face scarlet.

The quarrel, in which the voices of both Walsh and Burns at times attained the volume of shouts, was provoked by Walsh's questions as to why Burns's bureau did not undertake an investigation of the Teapot Dome transactions.

It started when Burns, after answering some of Walsh's earlier questions with obvious irritation, asked permission to make a statement.

He said he resented the insinuations and inferences that had arisen since the bureau was drawn into the testimony considering it not only a reflection on the department but on himself as well.

He paid high tribute to his staff, saying they were able, honest and conscientious men.

"When did you with all your able forces," Walsh snapped, "first learn of indications of corruption in this matter?"

The sarcasm was steel striking Burns's flint.

"When Doheny testified," he answered hotly.

"I'd like to say," he added, "that if anyone had asked me to investigate this matter it would have been done."

Walsh wished to know why he didn't undertake an independent investigation. Burns answered that he was acting under the attorney general, Harry M. Daugherty, from whom he got his instructions.

"Yes," Walsh interrupted, "we didn't want Mr. Daugherty to make the investigation."

The exchange of remarks was made in spectacular fashion. Burns crouched forward in his chair and glowered at Walsh who returned the glance with no less feeling. It was easily the best treat that spectators have had since the hearings began.

The verbal tourney came to its conclusion when Walsh said loudly.

"You wouldn't make an investigation until you were called upon no matter how much corruption was shown"?

"No," Burns barked and left the stand.

"Other developments were:

1. Burns admitted that he suggested the resignation of McLean as a special agent of the department of justice to relieve the attorney general of embrassment. McLean, however, has not resigned.

2. Mrs. W. O. Duckstein, agent of the department and wife of one of McLean's secretaries, admitted sending her husband a message in a department of justice code supplied her by Burns.

3. Senator Walsh read into the record private communications he had with E. L. Doheny about oil developments in Montana.

4. W. F. Friedman, code expert of the army, deciphered the code messages sent to McLean by his employes in Washington.

The examination of Burns and Mrs. Duckstein drew tighter the web of evidence that has been spun around the department of justice by the committee. Their testimony showed conclusively that McLean had access to the code and confidential information of the department.

Burns said he came into the department in August, 1921, and that

Heflin Makes New Charges

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, March 4.—Acrimonious debate burst forth anew in the senate this afternoon when Senator Heflin, Democrat of Alabama, charged Harry F. Sinclair with handling "race track bets" for cabinet members.

Heflin declared Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty was "reported to have gone with Sinclair to the race track" with a pool of money raised by unnamed cabinet members.

Heflin said Daugherty had lost but that Sinclair later "turned over a bunch of money" to the attorney general. These "winnings" said Heflin, were then divided among the cabinet members by Daugherty.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

POLISHED SILVER

"It's the same with everyone and everything," said the Silver Tea Pot to the Silver Cake Dish.

"Yes," the Silver Tea Pot repeated, "it is the same with everyone and everything.

"People will look at us and at members of the Silver family and they will say:

"'Goodness, gracious, but that silver looks positively black. It's a disgrace. Well, we must clean that soon.'

In a Horrible Fix.

"But somehow they seem to act a little angry at us because we get that way and because we don't keep polished all the time.

"But as I said, it is the same with everyone and everything. And to expect us to look polished all the time is too much, much too much."

"I agree with you," said the Silver Cake Dish. "People like us so much when we're polished and then they seem to think we're pretty and nice. They smile upon us then.

"But they frown upon us when we're dingy and dirty looking."

"Yes, that is the way they do. And often when they frown at us," the Silver Tea Pot said, "I feel like saying:

"'If you didn't comb your hair nicely all the time you'd look untidy, too, and we'd frown at you. If you didn't scrub your faces and your hands and your ears and your necks and take lots of good baths you'd look dingy and far from attractive, too.

"'And if you combed your hair one day and then went a month without doing it again you'd be in a horrible fix.

"'You'd be all tangles and you'd probably have to have your hair cut off.

"'We don't look as horrible as you'd look if you didn't keep yourselves polished up all the time. We last out better than the rest of you, so don't frown at us.'

"That is what I would like to say to them," the Silver Tea Pot said.

"They don't seem to realize that everyone and everything must be polished up—they seem to think that we get dirty just so as to torment them.

"And it's dreadful to have to be dependent upon people.

"Oh, if I could get a bit of silver polish and a soft cloth sometimes and if only I had a good strong arm instead of a handle I'd keep myself looking fine and bright.

"I don't need brains to look bright—I only need a polish.

"Now there are many others who must have brains to be bright—most of them in fact. But not the members of the Silver family.

"A little polish fixes us. And some good warm water afterward and a nice soft rub.

"Then we're as bright as can be."

"Oh, yes," said the Silver Cake Basket, "I, too, wish I could give myself a polish. I wouldn't look as I sometimes do if I could help myself.

"So it seems unfair when they frown at us, for it is not our fault when we look dingy. No, it is not our fault at all.

"A Little Polish Fixes Us."

"We stand up before the people and hope that our sad, dark, dull selves will make them feel sorry for us and that they'll say:

"'You poor, dear Silver pieces, we'll brighten you up at once.'

"But instead they frown and say:

"'Oh goodness, there is all that dirty silver staring at us to be cleaned.'

"But then again it is very bright and cheery," said the Silver Tea Pot a little later on, for the members of the Silver family were their polished, bright selves again!

FEEDING THE CHILD

The child of the family being the most important member as to feeding, it is wise to follow the English custom of having a table for the children. Here there is no temptation for them to taste food not good for them, for it is not seen or desired and there is no compromise between what they ought to have and what they want. The result when intelligently fed will be sturdy, healthy youngsters. Not so many American families follow this custom because of indifference, but more because of necessity.

In homes where they cannot be fed alone and properly they are too often allowed to eat at the family table where they usually cry and get what they cry for, for the sake of peace and at the sacrifice of health, manners and morals.

There are ways where meals may be simplified so that the children may be served at the same time without harm. One may restrict the diet of the adults to conform to the food needed for the children, having dinner at noon or letting the little people have a simple supper by themselves earlier in the evening than the dinner hour.

Children under five years of age should be given food easy of digestion, avoiding rich food of all kinds, pastries and cakes, except sponge. No rich puddings or sauces and very little meat, and that at long intervals.

Fortunately the child who has not been pampered and is in good health does not desire a variety of food. Good cooked cereals, toast, eggs, plenty of milk and fresh fruits, stewed prunes, orange juice every day with potatoes cooked in various ways and chicken once in a while, will be enough variety for any normal child.

One must remember that a growing child needs plenty of food, to build the body and supply heat and energy, too, for his active body. A child's digestion is more active than an adult's and it is able to take an extra meal or two daily without trouble. A light luncheon in the morning and afternoon, if only a glass of milk or a slice of bread and butter, will be found quite necessary to keep the little active body growing properly.

error, and President Coolidge is in error, because both have made almost identical statements. Also Congress and the United States Supreme Court are in error.

Your statement that "my information leads me to believe that, even in the Port of New York, the United States Prohibition Department has fallen down sadly," is made without any understanding of the situation. The Federal Prohibition department has no fleet or boats to combat smuggling. Such service and duty was transferred to the United States Coast Guard Service about one year ago after I had recommended the same. In this work the Coast Guard is ably supported by the Customs Department which has certain boats operating or patrolling in the upper New York bay and vicinity. The customs officers search every vessel coming in to discover smuggling of any character, which service does not come under the jurisdiction of the Federal Prohibition Department. All of these departments are divisions of the Treasury Department.

Your statement in regard to leaving, "the talking to be done by the Prohibition Department and I doubt if anybody can claim that this department has failed to embrace all its opportunities so far as that sort of enforcement is concerned," is absolutely untruthful. Although the press associations and newspapers have representatives at my office in New York twice each day, I have issued only two small statements pertaining to and in explanation of prohibition matters of general interest this year, and no more proportionately were issued last year.

In reference to Federal officials expending their energies in work and not in talk, I desire to inform you that unless I am mistaken, I am obliged to give more hours of intense and concentrated effort to my job than any official of Ulster county.

If the enforcement of National Prohibition is a farce in this part of the state it is mainly because the state, counties and municipalities and their officials have not seemingly understood their duty.

When you speak of the necessity of providing funds, I call your attention to the fact that officials are granted funds to enforce the laws of the land which include the National Prohibition Act. It also appears that you have not read the Federal statutes having application, as it is provided therein that any proper expense incurred by local officials and officers in the enforcement of the National Prohibition law and other Federal statutes is a proper claim against the United States government.

I cannot understand your letter in the light of the stand taken by over ninety per cent of the district attorneys of the state in presenting to the legislature a proposed state prohibition act with a statement affirming my position and the statements and views contained in my address at the state conference. In the statement presented by the District Attorneys' Association of the state, they oppose the claim made by Governor Smith and by you that the federal government should increase and extend their forces to enforce prohibition locally, and they state:

"Such duplication would not only overrun the state with thousands of federal agents but would also entail an enormous annual expense. Yet the adequate enforcement of the law clearly requires either this enormous extension of federal organization or the simpler remedy of the restoration of the state enforcement act The neglect of the state of New York to enact appropriate legislation in enforcement of the 18th amendment, in our judgment, constitutes in effect, an invitation to the federal government to assume and exercise within this state, police powers which hitherto have been exclusively exercised by the state. We regard such surrender of essential sovereign powers by this state as unsound in principle and vicious in practice, and respectfully urge upon the legislature of the state the desirability of reclaiming at the earliest possible moment the full control of the sovereign rights and powers of statehood for the conservation of public health, morality and safety."

These words are not uttered by any federal official but by the district attorneys of the state. I was informed by one district attorney who was present at the meeting that only four district attorneys of nearly fifty per cent at the meeting, voted against taking such position and action.

I am only prompted to write because as stated by you, "there is so much loose talk about prohibition and so much mis-information spread abroad that it seems to me about time somebody stated some actual facts." If you will read my address given at the State Conference, a copy of which I sent you, you must be impressed with the fact that it only states actual facts based upon the best statistics obtainable, and upon decisions of the United States Supreme Court, and upon statements made by Congress at the time of the passage of the National Prohibition Act and just previously thereto, and upon statements made by our present President and his predecessor, without criticism of anyone, and with full expression of appreciation for such cooperation as has been given the Federal Government.

I do not write this with any personal feelig or in a critical sense, but to present in a frank and friendly manner the correct situation and to clear up as far as possible any confusion of thought in relation to the matters contained in your letter published as above. The Federal department welcomes constructive criticism or suggestions, but unfair or erroneous statements or a mixture of correct and incorrect statements only tends to perplex and confound county municipal officials who have the desire to follow their oaths of office and to help enforcement to the fullest extent.

It is our desire to have the cooperation of all officials and I will thank you for any assistance you may render.

Respectfully,
PALMER CANFIELD,
Federal Prohibition Director.

Van Wagenen Force Banquets

Leaycraft Inn, West Hurley, was the scene of a festive affair Monday night, the occasion being a gathering of the employes of the L. B. Van Wagenen store, Wall street, the wives of the married men and the sweethearts of the young saleslaadies, guests of William H. Rudderham the local manager. The party which numbered over fifty left in one of the large Kingston-Pine-Hill autobusses and touring cars at 7:30 p. m. from the bus terminal on Crown street at the rear of the store. After arrival at the Inn and checking of coats and hats the party sat down to an elaborate course dinner with roast chicken done to a nicety which was enjoyed by all, while the Imperial orchestra rendered a concert program of late selections. After over an hour devoted by all to doing justice to the fine menu served, there was singing of old time songs and of late popular numbers in which the jolly party took part, Al King being the song leader. During the evening Manager Rudderham, the host, was presented with a solid silver cigarette holder, on which the emblem of the Order of Elks was engraved, by the employes, and Mrs. Rudderham was presented with a large bouquet of roses. Dancing followed to the strains of music rendered by the Imperial orchestra which was continued until 1 a. m., and soon after the party, although loth to do so, left for this city and their homes. The occasion will long be remembered by those who were present and words of praise were expressed today by the employes for the good time given them by Mr. Rudderham, their popular "boss," on Monday night

Little Misses' Frock of Pale Blue Chiffon

Shorter Skirt Favored by Designers in Paris

From Paris come reports that skirts are noticeably shorter, but as yet American women have not taken up the new length While very long skirts are not seen, it is quite apparent that women regulate the length of their skirts to conform to their type and lines.

In evening frocks, particularly those of the period type, skirts barely escape the insteps, but for any other purpose they are about eight inches from the floor.

The little cape either as part of a frock or as a separate wrap continues to hold its own, and in a new version it appears as an integral part of a bathing suit to be worn the coming summer.

These suits, by the way, are the last word in beach costumes and are wonderfully attractive. Made of mohair in shades of madonna blue, of soft gray green and of Chinese red, they have little round collars of fine white pique and fasten with white pearl buttons. The tunic reaches just above the knees, allowing several inches of knickers to be seen. The long sleeves are finished with cuffs of pique and there is a short circular cape that fastens onto the sleeves with flat buttons.

A cape similar in style is a feature of the costume. Charming in its straight lines, it is developed in heavy white tussor with conventional motifs embroidered in myrtle green silk. The dress is beltless and fastens with loops and self-covered buttons.

A tiny hat of green faille carries out the color scheme.

Corded Materials Are Again Given Approval

The twills of other seasons are being replaced by wool rep, and ribbed and corded materials are featured extensively in all fabrics. In combination with silk and artificial silk a surface is effected which adds richness to the simple untrimmed frock of today.

Such a tendency toward corded materials recalls the ottoman of our grandmother's best gown. The skill and technique of the textile designer and manufacturer today has made it possible to revive these rich materials with all the suppleness that fashion demands.

In the world of cottons, organdie has given way to her unstarched sister, batiste. Soft ecru tones in batiste and lace alternating around a bouffant skirt fashion a dance frock for the youthful, and a rosette of ribbon flowers in pastel tones with streamers of color dropping to the hem emphasizes the low waistline where skirt and bodice join.

All-over embroideries on a volle and crepe background are prominent and there is a feeling of the colonial spirit in the patterning, although in many instances the spirit of 1880 is evidenced, as in printed silks.

New Sport Fabric Looks Like Heavy Silk Crash

The new sport fabric, popular because of its texture as well as the shades in which it is produced, belongs rightfully to the eponge family. It looks a bit like heavy, rough, finished silk crash, and may be pure silk or combined with artificial silk. Such a fabric has many uses and when made into the new straight-line blouse adds a smart touch to a plaited chiffon skirt. A scarf of this fabric forms part of the blouse, for scarfs have gained so in importance that one scarcely designs a frock without including this bit of throw carelessly about the throat. A monogram on one end of the throw may be the only note of ornament and it is usually black. There is something about these soft solid tones that invariably calls for a note of black, however small.

In woolens, for they can never be overlooked, regardless of season, flannels, kadhas and creellas mark the world of sports. One-color effects follow the trend but very discreet color mixtures are prominent.

Nose Dive Not Serious With Enough Altitude

What is known as a "nose dive" is the evolution an obsolete plane makes when out of control, when it has lost flying speed. This is not always done intentionally by the pilot, although it is a favorite stunt performance of exhibition pilots. In a nose dive a plane is falling out of control because the elevators, ailerons and rudder are in such a position with respect to the slip-stream that they are inoperative.

This condition, however, is easily overcome, provided the pilot has sufficient altitude, for with ease he can regain a renewed grip of his controls on the slip-stream and regain his normal flying position. However, with obsolete planes the pilot is often forgetful near the ground, or his controls are not as sensitive as they should be, and he unfortunately fails to recognize the fact that he is losing his vitesse. A plane stalls at the beginning of a nose dive and hits the ground before the pilot is able to recover. Most accidents, as you have probably observed, are what might be termed "100-foot accidents," and in almost every case where the pilot had an altitude of over 300 feet, he would recover before hitting the ground, perhaps lighting with only minor breakages, if any.—Maj. W. G. Schauffler, in Advertising Magazine.

Commercial Wax Obtained From Numerous Sources

The list of things for which wax is used is long and constantly increasing. In the main, commercial wax is obtained from plants, from mineral oils, such as petroleum, and from bees. But there are some other sources. Many plants have a thin film of waxy material that covers the leaves and seems to protect them from too rapid evaporation.

The paraffin of commerce, so widely used, is obtained from petroleum, shale oil and lignite, says the Detroit News. Today petroleum is the chief source, although only certain kinds of oil produce marketable quantities.

In obtaining paraffin from petroleum a freezing mixture is applied, which reduces the temperature of the oil sufficiently to separate it into crystals. Ozocerite is an interesting wax, found in a solid state in beds of coal or associated bituminous deposits. It is related to paraffin and when pure is of similar color and texture.

Beeswax is a wax of very high quality. The comb is carefully saved and shipped by the beekeepers to the market. Spermacetti is a white wax of crystalline structure obtained as a solid precipitate from the head oil of the sperm and bottlenose whales, and to a lesser degree from sharks and dolphin oils.

Not What She Thought

Little Tommy Truffle had made a discovery and, being of a very generous disposition, was eager to share it with others.

"I is—" he began.

Teacher swooped down at once, that superior smile, so irritating to the sensitive mind of youth, upon her lips.

"'I am,' not 'I is,'" she corrected.

Tommy looked a little pained; almost, perhaps, a little doubtful. But he was an obedient little boy.

"I am the ninth letter of the alphabet," he announced.

Below - Eugene O'Neill, Ramsay MacDonald, Burton K. Wheeler.

In a series of notes that have passed between Raymond Poincare and Ramsay MacDonald, Great Britain's First Labor Premier has frankly told the French Premier that France's policy since the World War is breeding a new war. Despite protests, the Provincetown Players, of New York, will produce Eugene O'Neill's play, "All God's Chillun's Got Wings," in which Miss Mary Blair, a white actress, kneels before and kisses the hand of Paul Robeson, full-blooded negro actor U. S Senator Smith W Brookhart, of Iowa, heads the Senate committee that will investigate the official acts of Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty U S Senator Burton K Wheeler, of Montana, has challenged Daugherty to name any Senator he thinks should resign because of his official actions Steaks from buffalo have been sent to Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Benzol Poisoning Is Latest Labor Hazard

Benzol, a chemical which has come into wide use since the war in the chemical, rubber, paint and other industries, has introduced another hazard to the health of the worker which is being made the subject of a thorough investigation by a committee of the chemical section of the National Safety council, headed by Prof. C. E. A. Winslow of Yale university.

Cases of slow but sure poisoning growing out of daily contact with the chemical and of sudden death preceded by a state of intoxication on the part of the victim which caused him to laugh and sing before lapsing into unconsciousness resulted in early recognition of the fact that the use of benzol as a new solvent was creating new hazards for employees.

The use of mice to test atmospheres in which benzol has been stored, the use of gas masks, rules requiring that men working around benzol be in groups of twos and threes to avoid sudden and unobserved cases of asphyxiation are some of the measures employed to remove the hazard. But even with these precautions the dangers surrounding the use of benzol have not been entirely obviated. In one chemical plant in New York state, two men working in a ditch were missed at lunch time. Search leading to sounds of singing resulted in the discovery of the two men, one lying unconscious and the other singing at the top of his voice. The singer recovered, but his companion was not so fortunate. Those who have lived through an experience of this kind describe the effects of the fumes as similar to the exhilarating influence of overindulgence in alcoholic drinks.

The committee of the National Safety council, which has been studying the question of benzol poisoning since the early part of the year, mentions in a progress report which it has just issued, that the following precautions have been adopted by firms employing benzol: The use of inclosed apparatus for the handling of benzol; special precautions in handling the solvent so as to minimize exposure to the atmosphere; the use of special exhaust ventilation at points where benzol must necessarily be exposed; ample ventilation of the general occupied spaces where benzol is handled; the handling of benzol so far as possible at low temperatures; the use of special protective breathing apparatus; the use of rubber gloves; systematic medical examinations and education of the worker in regard to the dangers of the processes.

Practically all of these measures for the safeguarding of the health of employees is indorsed by the committee, which also recommends that new employees be given a physical examination with the object of excluding from benzol processes applicants suffering from organic diseases of the heart, lungs or kidneys, as well as from anemia or any other unusual blood condition.

Source of Modern Drama.

The morality play was first produced in England in the Fifteenth century, and growing out of church pageants, gave rise to modern drama. In the morality plays the characters personified abstract ideas, such as virtue, vice, wealth, power, knowledge, jealousy, ignorance, etc. The productions were meant to teach a needed reform, and quite often were dull, says the Detroit News. The vices, better understood by humanity than the virtues, played many tricky pranks and furnished the humorous element. The clowns and fools, superbly created by Shakespeare, were a development of the vices of the morality play.

What Are Ferrets Used For?

In some places they are used for hunting rabbits. The ferrets, either muzzled or unmuzzled, go into the burrows or underground runs of a rabbit warren and cause the rabbits to scurry out into the open where they may be more easily captured. However, the use of ferrets in hunting is prohibited in many of the states and is discountenanced by most conservative sportsmen, except where rabbits have become so plentiful as to be pests. Ferrets are now used mainly for starting rats from their underground homes or from the bottom of grain stacks, where rats do great damage.

THE GREAT "HE-POET" A LADY.

If Miss Lowell were not rich and socially prominent she would have been laughed out of court long ago. —Philadelphia Record.

This must be at least a large factor in the literary prominence of Miss Amy Lowell, although there will be many loth to agree that riches and social prestige can secure a literary reputation, even at a time when there are canny printers calling themselves publishers ready to put into good type and attractive binding anything that its wealthy author will more than pay for.

Miss Amy Lowell, who is the sister of the president of Harvard University and is understood to be wealthy, is the acknowledged leader of the new school of "free verse"—or prose, sometimes startling and too often designedly unintelligible, printed in lines of irregular length and thus somewhat suggestive of verse, yet lacking in either rhythm or rhyme. Judged by her product, Miss Lowell is not a poet; judged by some of her public utterances, she defies definite characterization and breeds speculation as to the real quality of her gray matter. For example, in a recent address before college girls she said that her school of verse represents the masculine in poetry and the old lyric form represents the feminine. In other words, Shakespeare, Milton, Burns, Byron, Browning, Kipling and the rest were she-poets, and it was left to Miss Lowell to supply the great need of a he-poet; they sung feebly in petticoats, while Miss Lowell, in all the glory of trousers, alone sounds the true and vigorous trumpet of poetry. It will at least be widely admitted that she is a humorist—of the solemnly and hopelessly unconscious sort.

"GET-RICH-QUICK" ROMANCE.

No doubt George Randolph Chester was a perfectly straight and otherwise estimable man. No doubt his death is sincerely mourned by his friends as well as by his family. But it can hardly be said that he put his literary talents to wholesome use, or that his "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" furnished inspiration of a desirable sort for the youth of America. Mr. Chester created a typical promoter of the crooked variety and carried him successfully through many shady business adventures. Of course Mr. Chester was amused as he did so, and his fondness for his audacious and rascally "hero" was purely literary, but it is to be feared that too many young readers were inspired with a desire to imitate the clever crook and "get rich quick" in a somewhat similar manner.

The "get rich quick" mania is only too real and widespread. It can be noted in every section and community. Only recently it was revealed in the family of a man of great distinction, high placed in the political world. It needs no encouragement from the romance writer dealing in the imaginary exploits of a business crook made so interesting that he excites involuntary sympathy. That Mr. Chester did encourage it by his entertaining accounts of the triumphs of his "Wallingford" there can be no question. Of course he wrote only for the fun of it and the money return, but how many readers followed the adventures of his "hero," at first only for the entertainment, then with somewhat of a desire to imitate, and finally with an eager eye for practical "points" that might be serviceable in similar operations?

Another thing I. Zangwill did not like in America was the oversupply of towels in hotels—needless yet adding to the amount of the excessive bill. In Europe you used to pay for the single candle which lighted you to bed and were not required to take more, but the man of cleanly habits, though thrifty, would hardly like to have towels doled out according to the same rule.

According to a dispatch from Dublin, Ireland in 1851 with a population of over six and a half millions had only 9,980 insane persons, while in 1921 with a population of less than four and a half millions Ireland's lunatics numbered 28,457. What was going on in that country in 1921 and during several years before that time was enough to drive half the population crazy, but with the measure of peace and quiet now established, with so much less political madness, no doubt there is prospect that fewer people will go off their heads.

That Body of Yours

NOSE ROOM.

You have perhaps found that you seemed to breathe more freely through the left nostril than through the right.

You have looked up into the nose by the aid of a mirror, and there sure enough, it showed that the division between your nostrils seemed to be bent over to the right, and thus more room was given to the left side.

This seemed to explain the easier breathing through the left side. And yet a little later you found that the left side seemed to be stuffed up, and that you did most of the breathing through the right nostril.

You are at a loss to understand how you are able to get enough air into the lungs through such a small space.

This "deflection of the septum" as this bending over of the division in the nose is called, is extremely common.

A straight septum giving an equal amount of space to each nostril is extremely rare.

So that the first thing to remember is that it has no significance, nor any harmful effect unless it practically touches the outer wall of the nostril.

And you can easily see why.

This means that one division will be large, and the other small, but the two divisions together, make up just the same amount of space for breathing, as if the septum were perfectly straight.

However, sometimes the septum is bent over almost to the outer wall, and then this may occur.

You get a little "cold" or irritation of the lining of the nose, and the lining of the outer wall and the covering of the septum both become slightly inflamed.

You can see then that the swelling of the wall and septum will actually bring those two parts together, and that nostril will be blocked.

You naturally ask why then is the other nostril, the wider one sometimes blocked?

Well, you can see that the septum has nothing to do with it anyway. What happens is that some other parts of the lining of the noise, further in, get inflamed.

This may be the covering of the little bony processes that stand out into the passage from the side walls.

My only point in this article is to show that deflections, or the bending over of the septum to one side occurs in nearly everybody to a slight extent, and usually means nothing.

Where it is bent too much and actually cuts off air supply, you are just that much short of having the necessary amount of air for your needs. In this case you should of course consult a specialist.

ELLENVILLE.

Ellenville, March 4.—The Eastern Star evening of games at the Masonic lodge rooms on Friday evening was a happy event. Mrs. George F. Hanker won the progressive pinochle prize; Miss Libby Frear the prize for the "confusion game." Various other prizes were awarded for other games. Dainty refreshments were served. An enjoyable feature of the evening was a violo solo by Mrs. Ivy Geary Elting, accompanied by Mrs. Betty Hansen at the piano. Another "evening of games" will be coming soon and plans are already under way to make it as successful as the previous ones have been.

A number of the members of the Eastern Star went to Summitville on Saturday to attend the funeral of Mrs. Kate Adams, who died last week. An Eastern Star ceremony was performed. Mrs. Adams having been a member of the order.

Gypsy Woman the Boss.

The wife and mother is the real boss of the gypsy family She controls the property, manages the children and holds the strings of the family pocketbook. They think the men are not wise and discreet enough to deal with such weighty matters. When the suffrage agitation was at its height in the country the gypsies marveled that American women were fighting for rights which their women had been exercising from the days of remotest antiquity. The "gypsy queen" is a familiar character in the gypsy camps of Europe, but in this country a man is usually in apparent command of the company. But those who have penetrated into the inner circles of their camps tell us that the women are the real leaders.—Kansas City Star.

Making Typewriter Fit.

Time was when the sewing machine placed through the strictures of limited space in the sitting room presented a problem of reconciling use with beauty, says the New York Sun and Globe. Today in the small apartment the typewriter presents the same problem. In one small apartment in lower Manhattan the problem was dealt with by the substitution of the usual typewriter cover by a square of rose-colored velvet in flowing drapes. The looseness of the cover conceals the nature of the hidden object and permits the dwellers to delude themselves that it adds a touch of oriental mystery to the room. If the lost cover could be found no doubt the seductive velvet draping would be discarded.

Ancient Tribe Is Found.

Discovery of a tribe whose people he believes to have antedated the ancient Egyptians, is reported to the National foreign trade council by John Gillen Culbertson, a manufacturer of Wichita Falls, Tex., on his return from a South American tour of a year and a half, says the Detroit News. These people, known as the Machigins, speak a language very similar in construction to English, he reports, and declares they worshiped trees in the tradition that their ancestors had escaped extinction in the Biblical flood by climbing trees. The tribes live in the country of the headwaters of the Amazon, where Mr. Culbertson says he had invaded forests never before penetrated by white men.

First to Illustrate Bible.

No one knows who was the first to illustrate the Bible. Much of this work was done in convents, many of which kept a large number of monks constantly at work making copies of the Bible by hand It may be that descriptions of angels were handed down by tradition from the shepherds or others professing to have seen these celestial visitors, also, in the description of the angel at the sepulchre it was said, "His raiment was as white as snow." (Matthew, 28 3) However, on the whole it may be safely said that pictures of angels are fanciful creations in which each artist expresses his own ideas of the beautiful.

Measuring Men.

She (History) measures men not by the tawdry reputations of the hour, but by the influence they can diffuse; . . . she finds that few—few indeed—have been able to spread their influences beyond their age; she notes many exalted to the skies, and she sees that in the next generation their name is clean put out; she measures the greatness of men as men do the height of mountains, by the length of the shadows they cast upon the surface of the world; and, measuring thus, she bids those whose influences live through the ages to sit like gods among the hills of time.—Bishop Carpenter.

RHEUMATIC PAINS GO QUICKLY WITH ALESSANDRO VOLTA'S DISCOVERY

No Medicines To Take. Results Guaranteed by Local Druggists.

An amazing new treatment for Rheumatism has been received in this country from Italy. This new scientific discovery promises to put an end to terrible rheumatism suffering in even the most stubborn cases.

Alessandro Volta, the well-known Italian physicist, for whom the electric volt has been named, discovered a scientific combination of certain ingredients in the form of a fine powder that is intended to be a powerful and active Uric Acid solvent. This discovery he has called Volta. It is not to be taken internally, but is shaken into the shoes or stockings and is intended to be absorbed into the blood through the pores of the feet. This absorption is aided by the fact that the soles of the feet contain over 10 times the number of pores found in any other part of the body.

So remarkable and rapid have been the results from the use of Volta powder, both in this country and in Italy, that the American distributors have authorized local druggist to dispense Volta with an unqualified guarantee of relief from the use of the very first package or your money will be refunded.

If you suffer from rheumatism, pains, Sciatica, Lumbago, Gout, or Neuralgia, you owe it to yourself to try this remarkable scientific treatment. It is absolutely harmless and will not cost one cent if you do not receive wonderful relief.

You can get a box of Volta, with an absolute guarantee of quick relief, from such good druggist as: McBride Drug Store, W. S. Eltinge, Maben & Walker, Bongartz Pharmacy, Weber's Pharmacy, Connelly Drug Co.

Brinnier Eulogized

3,000 Yearly Got Free Legal Advice; Many Kept Out of Litigation, Says Canfield, Former Partner

In formal resolutions and informal speeches, members of the Ulster county bar and Judge Howard, who is presiding at the present term of the Supreme court, paid tributes of respect to the late Hon. William D. Brinnier, shortly before the adjournment of court Monday afternoon.

The resolutions were prepared by a committee and presented to the court by Mr. Brinnier's former law partner, ex-Mayor Palmer Canfield, Jr., who said:

Before presenting this report of the committee, I would like to preface it with just a few words. There are always times in life when we have to stop, pause and turn about face and cast our thoughts and reflections to the past. Such a situation presents itself to the Ulster County Bar at this particular time. It has lost one of its members, one of its outstanding members, one who has practiced actively as a member of this bar for forty-four years. The walls of this court room, if they had the faculty of utterance, if they had the power of speech—they could tell much of the striving and earnest work of this member of the bar. They could tell how he put his whole heart and soul in the trial of cases in behalf of the interests and in sustaining and supporting the rights of his clients. He was always unswerving in his fidelity and he always exhibited his best to his clients in the trial of their cases.

But besides that he possessed the unusual, and perhaps double quality of being what we designate a counselor. I doubt if any other attorney in Ulster county had so many clients who not only took and accepted but followed his advice, as William D. Brinnier. I doubt if there has ever been a lawyer who gave advice so freely and to such an extent gratuitously. In my opinion and estimation, during the forty-four years of his practice, I served with him for half of that time, and in my opinion and estimation there were at least three thousand persons who entered his office each year and who received good advice free of charge.

That, in the long period of years he served as a member of the bar would have amounted in money to a large sum, and although he, as the calendars have always shown that he was active in connection with litigation, the one-half is not shown by the calendars because in at least fifty per cent of the proposed cases or litigation submitted to him, he persuaded his clients not to litigate.

I know that none of us possess all the best elements of life. I know there are some perhaps like the rose bush, and others stand out like a rock, strong and rugged. He was one of those characters. Like the oak in the forest, always resisting the greater number of shafts directed toward it. He was a man who stood up firm and made strong friends and an enviable name. Bacon said that there is very little friendship in this world. I think there are always times, or a particular time, in everyone's life when we think that is true perhaps. I believe that is too harsh a philosophy to adopt. Yet we know that Mr. Brinnier had strong friends. He made friends of his clients because his advice and counsel was always wise and prudent and good, and when they followed it, it brought to them favorable results. We know that perhaps there is too much of the things in life pertaining to envy, jealousy, ill will and those destructive elements which we see come to the surface and which perhaps should be submerged to a greater degree so that the better qualities and fellowship might control our respective lives.

Perhaps I know more than anyone the particular phases of life he had to meet. As an outstanding, combative, vigorous, forceful member of this bar, he was often held up by the other members as the one lawyer who must be defeated. With all that at no time did he swerve from the high ideals and lofty conceptions of the relationship of attorney and client.

So it is a particular privilege to have an opportunity to pay tribute to him as a lawyer and as a man.

If Your Honor please, I present the report of this committee which I will now read:

The Committee's Resolutions.

The undersigned committee representing the bar of Ulster county, New York, appointed by the Hon. Wesley O. Howard, justice of the supreme court, at a trial term of the supreme court held at the court house in the city of Kingston, Ulster county, New York, on the third day of March, 1924, do report to the court:

That is the death of the Hon. William D. Brinnier on January 30th, 1924, Ulster county has suffered the loss of one of its leading figures and one of the most successful attorneys who ever practiced at the bar of this county.

He possessed the disposition, mental qualifications and strength to an exceptional and unusual degree of a wise and prudent counselor and of an active and forceful trial lawyer.

He was ever faithful in upholding the rights and interests of his clients. He was a vigorous combatant in court, always giving his best efforts to those whom he served. To the court he was an attorney of ripened experience and of unusual ability and power. To the jury he was a man whom they understood and who understood them.

He enjoyed a large clientele who trusted implicitly in his judgment and depended upon his counsel and he failed them not. They could well say, "I like my counsel; well hast thou advised."

He was an active force in the legal life of this and adjoining counties for over forty years. His long career was characterized by unswerving allegiance to client and by extraordinary success.

William D. Brinnier left many friends who will miss him.

We recommend that this report be made a part of the record of the minutes of this court, and that a certified copy be transmitted by the clerk of the court to his family.

Judge Howard's Analysis.

Judge Howard: I think I ought to say that I fully concur with this eulogy upon Mr. Brinnier. I was very much attracted to the man. When I began to come down here twenty-one years ago, William D. Brinnier was a brilliant and forcible character, and to me a very entertaining one. He broke the monotony which is so often the lot of the court, and always when he was in a lawsuit there was something doing. I considered him an unusual character. His mind worked like a flash of lightning. He was a perfect meteor. He was dynamic in his nature, alert, adroit, resourceful, eloquent and everything that a great brilliant trial lawyer ought to be. He was persuasive to the jury. He knew human nature. He knew the jury. He knew what to say to the jurors and how to get down and talk to them in their own language so that they could understand him. He knew the value of the climax. He knew when to stop examining a witness. He never over cross-examined. He always stopped when the psychological effect had been attained.

William D. Brinnier was one of the most versatile, eloquent, resourceful and able trial lawyers I ever knew, his talents mounting, in my estimation, in that particular line of work, almost to genius.

I became greatly attached to him and was very much shocked when I learned of his death.

Had Courage, Says Van Etten.

Judge John G. Van Etten: On this occasion my mind travels back almost forty years to the time when Mr. Brinnier and myself were both young men. In those days we practiced law against each other I believe in every town in the county of Ulster. Since that time we have had a great deal of litigation in which we were upon opposite sides. I have seen his development from the time when he started, without prestige and with but few friends, unknown, without backing—when he was making his way, and after a few years it was apparent that he had a large and growing clientele. He had the ability to secure followers and of men who believed in him, and he was capable of holding them after they once became his friends. I know of no lawyer who had a more loyal clientele than William D. Brinnier.

Among his many characteristics, he was a safe counselor. I have frequently heard him give advice not after examining the law on the subject but as it appeared to him in the first instance, and afterwards in verifying it usually the verification was in line with the advice which he had given.

He was a very unusual man in respect to the courage of his convictions. What he had to say he did not hesitate to speak at once. He never kept anything within himself that he felt in regard to another person or in regard to a case which he was trying. He was unusual in his ability to read human nature. I have tried many cases opposed to him and I have been perfectly astounded at the way in which he could read a jury and appeal to them, and the success which followed his efforts in that regard.

The station which he had in life he made for himself. He had the respect of the citizens of this city and of this county, among all classes, the high and the lowly. They were his most loyal followers. Financial institutions depended on his advice. He handled some of the largest and most difficult legal business in the county, and he handled it successfully.

I knew that Mr. Brinnier on a number of occasions contributed generously to charity. I know that when he did so he did not want other people to know about it. He has frequently told me about different things which he had done and in that respect he always said "I want no one else to know it."

The people of this city and county have lost one of its leading citizens by his death. He had the respect of the entire community, and the Bar of Ulster county has lost one of its best and leading lawyers.

Neighbors for 48 Years.

Judge James A. Betts: I want to speak about the death of William D. Brinnier along little different lines. In September, 1880, William D. Brinnier, at Saratoga, was made a member of the bar of this state. In November of the same year, at Albany, I was admitted to practice. At that time Mr. Brinnier was a clerk at the office of Derrick W. Sparling, one of the active lawyers of this city and county. I was across the street from him in the office of Judge Schoonmaker, as a clerk to the firm of Schoonmaker & Linson. In that office I stayed for several years until I went to the surrogate's office. Mr. Brinnier shortly after his admission to practice law had his office in the Wynkoop building on Wall street. He did not like it there. He was upstairs. So he came back to John street, purchased a lot and built the law office which he occupied until the time of his death. So that he and I so far as association was concerned were very much thrown together.

When I became surrogate, he practiced before me a great deal. He was, I think, one of the largest practitioners in that court at that time although quite a young man. When I became justice of the supreme court, during the time I spent here he was, I think, the busiest lawyer that came before me. As Your Honor has well remarked, when he was engaged in the trial of a lawsuit there was always something doing. That was true when he was practicing before a jury. His large acquaintance throughout the county gave him a wonderful advantage perhaps in knowing the surroundings and condition of the men who were chosen as jurors in this county.

But he was also gifted in the matter of presenting cases before a judge at chambers. His papers upon examination stood the test of a critical examination. He did not put too much in them and he left nothing out that would help him. He was very successful also in that branch of his practice.

After my term expired I went back as a neighbor to Mr. Brinnier. So that for over forty-three years, setting aside the time of about three years that he had studied law prior to that, we were closely associated. We were great friends. We did not always agree upon matters of procedure or upon things that should be done, but we were always warm personal friends.

I feel that of all the Bar of Ulster county there is no other with whom I have been associated so much and whose absence I shall feel.

Judge Hasbrouck's Tribute.

Judge G. D. B. Hasbrouck: I did not know until just a moment ago that there was a motion pending before the Court with reference to Mr. Brinnier's death.

I am unable to sit here and not participate to a certain extent in the consideration of the motion which is before the court. Like Judge Betts I am a contemporary of Mr. Brinnier in the legal forum with which we are all so familiar. I have felt the poignancy of the stab of the legal weapons which Brinnier handled, and so I have been impressed with the fact that in our arena he was facile princeps.

But I am here to discuss him rather from a different angle. Appointed corporation counsel of the city in 1887 without the support of Mr. Brinnier, who was a member of the common council, who did not think he liked my type of man, I found that he was devoted to the public welfare. He was as honest and courageous an official in his aldermanic seat as ever sat in the city hall. His conduct in life as a public citizen was an inspiration to anybody who had the capacity to observe him.

He served the city as alderman from the Ninth Ward for many years. In connection with Judge Betts he served in the board of education, that was the predecessor of the present board, and I never heard anybody criticise the honesty or the competency of the service he rendered to the cause of education.

But what I liked about him more than anything else in his composition was that he possessed a superb courage. I don't think Brinnier ever looked in the eyes of any man that he feared. So that when he came into court as an antagonist he was ready to stand for his client to the last ditch, and consideration of himself was largely placed behind him.

Now when you find a member of the bar who has this witticism that Mr. Brinnier displayed in the presence of the public, when you have his great competency which has been developed here as a lawyer, when you consider his courage and the mould in which the man was made and give it due appreciation, then I think that there could be no voice here which would not be in accord with the resolution before the court and which would not approve the private, the professional and the public life of William D. Brinnier.

I join in asking the court to adopt the resolution.

Symbolized a Living Flame.

Judge James Jenkins: If Your Honor please, I did not intend to say anything but I cannot let the opportunity pass without saying a few words with regard to a man such as Mr. Brinnier. I believe that such a force should be given some attention. The symbol that I would call to mind for Mr. Brinnier would be a living flame rather than a solid rock. His temperament was warm. He would have his quarrels. They would be bitter. I have been engaged in many a controversy with Mr. Brinnier. We have had bitter quarrels but after were over they would be forgotten. He was quick. He possessed the most remarkable intuition. I never knew a man that could take a set of facts and give so correct a legal opinion thereon as Mr. Brinnier could, without even opening a book. He would sense the question in the case without a moment's hesitation.

I practiced law with him in this city for twenty-five years and upwards. I have been associated with him and I have been opposed to him. I have entered into many stipulations during my practice at the bar but I have never entered into a stipulation with Mr. Brinnier that was ever broken.

I can say of him as Hamlet said of his father:

"He was a man,
Taken for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again."

Action by the Court.

The Court: Does anybody else desire to be heard? If not, the motion is adopted and the report of the committee may be spread upon the minutes. The clerk of the court is directed to send a copy as requested in the motion, and I also direct that the expression of the various members of the Bar be spread upon the minutes and a copy of the same, together with the resolution, be sent to the family of Mr. Brinnier.

TAKE SALTS IF STOMACH ISN'T ACTING RIGHT

Says Indigestion Results from an Excess of Hydrochloric Acid.

Undigested food delayed in the stomach decays, or rather ferments, the same as food left in the open air, says a noted authority. He also tells us that Indigestion is caused by Hyperacidity meaning there is an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach which prevents complete digestion and starts food fermentation.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive aids and instead get from any pharmacy four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and drink it while it is effervescing, and furthermore, to continue this for a week. While relief often follows the first dose, it is important to help neutralize the acidity, remove the poisoning mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salts is used for many stomach disorders with excellent results.

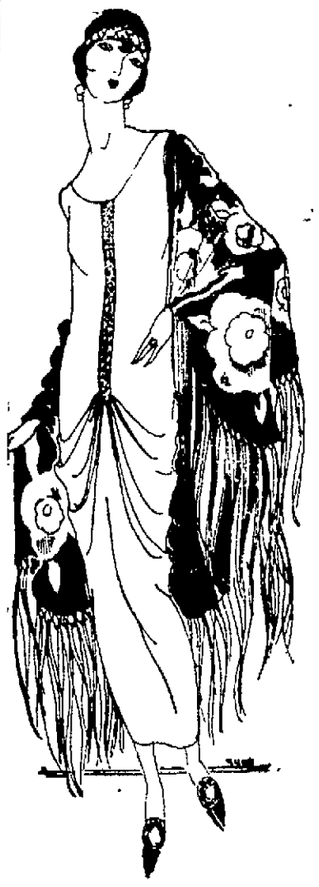
TRIMNESS THE AIM OF PRESENT FASHIONS.

(By Eleanor Gunn.)

March winds do not make much headway against the cloche. Boyish bobs and close fitting hats protect us from the havoc usually wrought by whistling winds and insure tidiness greatly to be desired. While it is always commendable to be trim just now, attaining trimness seems about the most necessary step toward interpreting what fashions aim to express.



Clean cut, beautifully tailored slender lines are the Alpha and Omego of our existence even though by night we aspire to pictorial qualities which depend on wide skirts and shawl. Our shawl need not be Spanish, but we must have a shawl. It may be a huge crepe square fringed in self color. It may be the thin transparency of net with ribbonzine or other embroidery, but it must be fringed.

In Havana, where shawls were never seen until recently, except at carnival time or at a masque ball, they are now worn in a bewildering array, including silk filet and shell stitch crochet effects in heavy silk. Painted and printed effects as well as the bold broad bands peculiar to Roman silks are worn as well as peasant shawls in cashmere and lovely batik silks but all this if after six. By day we must be trim and tailored, the lines of the body even to the extent of the head, must be outlined.

NEW PALTZ.

New Paltz, March 3.—Millard Roosa has taken the position as caretaker of the New Paltz Rural Cemetery, Edward Schoonmaker having resigned. Mr. Roosa will occupy the new house just built for the use of the caretaker.

Jacob Clearwater was pleasantly surprised Wednesday evening, February 27, when a few friends came in to spend the evening to celebrate his sixty-first birthday.

Amon Roosa has the contract for the masonry work on the new stone bungalow to be built on the corner of Plattekill avenue and South Oakwood Terrace, for Mrs. Carrol of New York.

Mrs. Richard Elmendorf is moving in her home on corner of Wurts street and Mohonk avenue, that she recently purchased of Mrs. Shyers of New York.

Mrs. Ella Butz and Miss Margaret Newton were hostesses to a few friends on Monday evening at a Mah Jongg party. Dainty refreshments were served and Mrs. Butz in her Mah Jongg blue Oriental costume added much zest to the occasion.

The next meeting of the Dutch Arms will be held on Tuesday evening, March 4. Kenneth Snyder has the entertainment in charge, Paul Raetz will be chef with his helpers and a good meal is being looked forward to. Harold Wood is in charge of the music.

Miss Glck spent a few days in New York.

Mrs. William Carter of Clintondale was a caller in htown one day this week.

THE OFFICE CAT

Two Mottoes.

For worried taxpayer: "E Pluribus Bonus."

For pro-bonus workers: "Their Name is Legion."

Why is it that the woman who is acknowledged by all her friends to be a dutiful wife, almost invariably looks tired and humble?

Sweet visiting girl, so pure, so true,
She surely was the berries!
Yes, my heart is with the home-town girl,
But my lips are parked on Mary's.

A pretty face isn't sufficient equipment for life, says a feminine writer. That's true. Some very pretty girls have ordinary ankles.

Nobody is more cynical than a flapper who is obliged to go to a petting party with a cracked lip.

The man who hasn't time for public work does the most kicking because somebody else runs the town.

A Kingston man is convinced that he will never be a fashionable "gazabo" because he can't sleep with the sun shining.

A local food crank is attempting to revive interest in the alleged edibility of the blackbird, and says that "while there is no bounty on blackbirds, their breasts are about as good eating as the quail." Blackbird breast has a nutty flavor and so has this outburst.

We can't recall the old joke we pulled in years gone by;
We cannot think of new ones, no matter how we try—
For taxes, coal and other bills have made us want to cuss—
We cannot crack a single joke; we feel quite serious.

Sawing wood, shoveling coal and getting out the ashes are fine winter sport.

Some Bugler.

Two negro buck privates were discussing the relative merits of their buglers during the World War.

First Private—"Why, man, dat bugler of ourn am so good, when he plays 'Pay Day' hit sounds 'xactly lak de Symphony Orchestra playing 'De Rosary.'"

Second Private—"Hush, nigger, you ain't got no bugler a-tall. When our bugler, Snowball Jones, wraps his lips roun' dat bugle an' sounds 'Mess Call' ah looks down at mah beans and says: 'Strawberries, behave; you're kickin' de whipped cream outer de plate!'"

Customer Ownership

"Recently our household had an investment of $700.00 maturing, which we wanted to reinvest. We had received your descriptive circular offering United Hudson First Mortgage Gold Bonds with interest at 6% and convertible on any interest date to Cumulative Preferred Stock paying 7%. As the Company seemed to be a strong one, furnishing an essential service, and interested in the general development of the community, this investment opportunity was inviting.

"While we were discussing it, the bill for gas and electric service came in, amounting to $4.00. We then looked up the old bills and found that our average for the year amounted to $4.00 a month, or about $48.00 a year. My daughter suggested that the old investment had been earning less than 6%, and she exclaimed: 'If we buy United Hudson Bonds earning 6% and then convert them on the next interest date into 7% Preferred Stock, the Company will pay us $49.00 a year, and that is a dollar more than we pay the company for all the gas and electricity we use.'"

Over 10,000 customers and residents of the Central Hudson Valley have invested in the securities of the gas and electric companies comprising the Central Hudson System.

Five Weeks More.

Kellogg's Bran did more in two weeks than medicine taken in 20 years

Out of regard for your own health, read this letter:

Gentlemen

Your "Krumbled Bran," used by me as a cereal, has done more for me in two weeks than the hundreds of dollars' worth of medicine I have taken in last twenty years for constipation. It is wonderful, and it is so simple. Yours truly,

Arlington H Carman,
Patchogue, N. Y.

Mr. Carman's experience has been duplicated in thousands of homes. Why does Kellogg's Bran succeed when drugs and pills fail? The answer is simple. Drugs have an unnatural effect upon the bowels. They irritate the intestines. The more they are used, the more one has to use. Finally, they have no effect at all.

Kellogg's Bran STIMULATES the intestines. It cleans, sweeps and purifies them. It acts exactly as nature acts. And it is never necessary to increase the amount eaten. If eaten regularly, Kellogg's Bran is guaranteed to bring permanent relief to the most chronic cases of constipation, or your grocer returns your money. For Kellogg's Bran is ALL bran. Nothing but ALL bran can be so effective. That is why doctors recommend Kellogg's.

The wonderful, nut-like flavor of Kellogg's Bran is exclusive. It is delicious—totally unlike ordinary brans. Eat two tablespoonfuls daily—in chronic cases, with every meal. Eat it with milk or cream, and in the recipes on every package. Kellogg's Bran, cooked and krumbled, is made in Battle Creek. Sold by all grocers.

"OLD MISS," PLANTATION MANAGER

Miss Effie Moncure and I friends of a half hour, were lunching on shrimps and rice. It was a quaint little restaurant, not to be duplicated in any metropolis. Neither are shrimps and rice, cooked as these were cooked, to be duplicated outside of Dixieland—or of Shreveport, for all I know. Certainly Miss Moncure is unique in her "side line."

"I'll have to get back to work fairly early," she suddenly said. "My black folks come in for supplies this afternoon." Therein lay a romance of the feudal age. But the lord of the castle had become a lady! And the lady was the pretty young person who had introduced herself merely as "an average private secretary."

A leading lawyer of this Louisiana town is also, by inheritance, a planter. His acres are planted to cotton, cultivated on shares. Each of his fifteen negro families has 20 acres. The sharing scheme has become hereditary, a voluntary serfdom. The preacher, for instance, is son of five generations of negro preachers born on the same soil, illiterate and perpetually in debt to the current generation of owners. "Wildcat," a negro of recent literary fame, grew up, Miss Moncure says, on "her place."

When the owner had to go West for his health, she inherited his oversight of the place. Last year, despite floods, replanting and low prices, she managed to make the rent and a $3 000 profit as against no rent and a $2 000 deficit before she took charge. She has to advance supplies of every sort for the full year in the proportion these childlike negroes need, not want; see that enough corn and alfalfa are raised for stock and that all work steadily. She has to share all their joys and sorrows, yet retain their respect. Their nickname, "Old Miss," applied to her under-thirty self, is the final proof of their devotion and trust in her, Shreveport folk say.

That Miss Moncure has personality goes without saying. She is the first woman of her family to work outside her home. Her grandmother was "the earliest white woman settler on the last river bank along the Texas trail" and thus a founder of the oldest family of Shreveport. Miss Moncure, to become a stenographer, made sure she could "spell, translate French law, and look up authorities" and thus took herself outside the mediocre class before she started.

She believes that by staying in the smaller place a woman has "a better chance of becoming known in business, and retains the social position which means real times."

Japanese Kiss Occasionally.

It is often said that the Japanese never kiss. This is not quite true. They do kiss occasionally in their own homes, but never outside them. So strong, indeed, is the feeling against kissing in public that when moving pictures were first taken to Japan, the audience there hooted at the tender passages.

JUDGE FOWLER CATCHES 7-FOOT FISH IN FLORIDA

The Fort Lauderdale (Florida) Herald says:

Fort Lauderdale entertained a distinguished visitor last week in the Hon. Joseph M Fowler, county judge of Ulster county, New York. While his stay here was brief he left town a confirmed booster of this city and its many attractions. In addition to a round of social activities the judge and his brother were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. E J Tranter for a day's fishing on the Kingfisher. An ardent trout fisherman throughout his life, the judge has whipped the streams of Ulster and adjoining counties in the Catskill mountains for speckled beauties but this was his first experience with ocean game fishing. Despite the fact that he was a novice at hunting the big game fish which abound in Florida waters, Judge Fowler fought and brought in one of the largest if not the largest sailfish landed here this season on light tackle, his prize being a seven foot, four inch specimen that weighed 64 pounds. The fish was brought to the boat after a fight lasting forty-five minutes, every moment full of thrills and excitement. It is most probable that trout fishing lost a lifelong devotee, but deep sea fishing gained a recruit, for hereafter the thrill of landing a two pound trout will play into insignificance and but recall the greater fight with a man's size fish in Florida waters. Fort Lauderdale, however gained a new friend, for the judge announced that next season he will be here for an extended stay and a further try at the sport. In addition to the sailfish mentioned, the party brought in two other members of that family and a number of dolphin, kingfish and bonita.

JAPANESE PRINCE "RETURNS TO LIFE"

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Tokio, March 4.—All of Japan was today discussing the marvel of the return to life of Prince Masayoshi Matsukata after his death had been announced, his obituary published, plans for his funeral discussed and the emperor's grief publicly proclaimed.

Second Childhood

The inspector was paying his monthly visit to the village school. He examined the children in reading and general knowledge as was his custom, and was very much pleased with the answers he received.

After the last question had been asked and answered satisfactorily, he rose to his feet, and, looking slowly around on the upturned faces, he remarked genially:

"I wish I was a little boy at school again."

He allowed a few moments for this to sink in, and then added:

"Do you know why I wish that?"

For a moment or two there was silence, and then a childish voice from the back of the room was heard to say:

"'Cos you've forgot all you ever knowed."

Missed a Lot

An old Scotchman who went to a horse race for the first time was induced to stake five shillings in the third race on a 50-to-1 chance.

The horse won, and when the bookmaker handed the old man his winnings he could hardly believe his eyes.

"Dae ye mean to say I get all this for ma 5 shillings?" he exclaimed.

"You do," replied the bookmaker.

"My conscience!" muttered the Scotsman. "Tell me, mon, how long has this thing been goin' on?"

"BLASE IN TROUBLES" AT OLD POLISH SCHOOL

The climax of all social activities of all the societies closely connected with the Immaculate Conception Church on Delaware avenue is going to be held tonight, when the recently organized Young Men's Society of the parish is going to give a farewell show before all the friends of the church. The play is widely given all over the country and always with great success, showing the pitfalls of a man, who got a job that was bigger than his capacity goes. The most unfortunate positions of the unhappy "Blase" who finds himself always "in blases" with everybody and everything, because he is too small-brained to meet situations and make the best of them. Plenty of laughing, from the heart straight, will be the closing exercise for all young and old. A healthy and true line of real Americanization, is the solution of the mixup, that finally ends, like all good things end, with comfort to Blase, as be finally finds his place where he belongs.

The St. Aloysius Society is drawing more and more of the young element to its healthy work of a splendidly equipped reading library, fundamental work for the amalgamation of the all into one strong unit for the better observance of all laws by all, but advance it by enlightenment, and by inculcating the advantages coming to its citizens.

Father Ignatius is untiring in providing for the young element of his charge a healthy recreation, and promote good fellowship and friendship and good will among them, and donating a library to the young folks of over 200 books of good English and Polish literature, that makes them love the birthplace they come from, and makes them embrace the opportunities of the beautiful birthright of America, and all its beneficial institutions. A man, who loves his mother and his father, becomes a better man, and the destinies of government may safely be entrusted to such a one.

All friends tonight will be royally welcomed at 8 o'clock at the old school building, and after the show, the admission tonight of 35 cents entitles to coffee and more "Ponczki" and also different soft drinks will be served by the young ladies of the Children of Mary Society. All lights out before 12 o'clock.

D. A. R. Meeting.

A regular meeting of Wiltwyck Chapter, D. A. R., will be held at the Chapter House, Thursday at 3 p. m. The program will be in charge of Mrs. J. A. McCommons who will have a paper on "Our American Ideals Better than Those of the Rest of the World." The hostesses will be Mrs. Hillis and Mrs. MacFadden.

LOCAL DEATH RECORD.

Recent Deaths and Funerals of Persons in This Vicinity.

Henry A. Bettenhausen died at his home in Binnewater on Sunday morning, March 2, in the 54th year of his age. Funeral Wednesday morning, at 11 o'clock from the late residence. Interment in Hurley Cemetery.

In the obituary notice of the death of Richard R. Terwilliger in Monday's issue of The Freeman the names of two surviving children, William Terwilliger and Mrs. Frank Conklin, both of Yonkers, were inadvertently omitted. Funeral from the late residence, 507 Washington avenue, Wednesday afternoon.

Henry N. Kopf, for some twenty years an employe of the Ulster & Delaware Railroad and for fifteen years a resident of Oneonta, died Saturday at his home there, aged 45 years. For the past fifteen years he was an engineer on the railroad. Nineteen years ago he married Miss Maud Simmons of Ulster county and she, with six children, survive.

Edward Comfort died at his home on Livingston street, Saugerties, at noon today. Mr. Comfort was in the 87th year of his age and enjoyed good health until about a month ago. He was well and favorably known throughout Saugerties and his death causes grief among his many friends and acquaintances. He is survived by one son, William, at home. Funeral notice later.

Creighton Birket Pollock, formerly of John street, Saugerties, died, after many years of illness, on February 19, at his home, 52 South avenue, Atlantic Highlands, N. J. He is survived by a daughter, Miss Jessie Pollock. Mr. Pollock lived in the village of Saugerties a number of years. His wife, Amelia Pollock, died at Englewood, N. J., shortly after leaving Saugerties. Mr. Pollock was an expert accountant and at one time auditor of the Great Northern Railroad. He suffered a nervous break down and never fully recovered.

The funeral of John J. Fallon, a former resident of this city, who died at the family residence 208 Twentieth street, West New York, N. J., on Friday morning last, was held from the late home Monday morning at 8:30 o'clock and from St. Joseph's Church, Twenty-first street and Palisade avenue, West New York, at 9 o'clock where a high Mass of requiem was celebrated for the repose of his soul by the Rev. Father Keyes. The funeral services were very largely attended, the deceased having commanded the respect and esteem of the entire community in which he resided. The beautiful and numerous floral offerings gave testimony of his worth among his friends. An exceptional large gathering of friends was at the West Shore station Monday afternoon to meet the remains, which arrived on the 2:10 o'clock train and to escort the body to St. Mary's cemetery, where the internment was made in the Fallon family plot after the Rev. Eugene A. Duggan had pronounced the committal services.

New Use for Cigarettes

Mexicans working in a lead mine in Chihuahua have found a new use for cigarettes. The mine consists of a series of caves along the sides and bottoms of which lead and silver ore in paying quantities is found. The miners have noticed that smoke from their cigarettes is sucked through cracks in the rocks at certain points. By drilling in the wake of the smoke, they break through into another cave. This method of tracing ore has been followed through a series of caves and still the smoke passes out at the end of the last cave discovered, indicating that there are other caves ahead.

Lights to Test the Dye

Of foreign origin a new machine called a fadeometer is used for testing the fastness of dyes. Violet carbon arc lights are used, 40 samples being tested at one time if necessary. Half the sample is exposed to the light, and the other half protected by a metal shade, so that after test an exact comparison can be made. Special carbon rods, impregnated with a secret chemical formula, give the light of this arc fading qualities exactly similar to daylight, although greatly intensified.

Has Odd Leap-Year Watch

John J. Kingsley of Boston, a jeweler, has what is known as a leap-year watch. It contains a wheel, very tiny in proportions, that makes a complete circuit only once in four years, although it is "running" constantly. This leap-year wheel is one of more than 3,000 parts in the rare timepiece. At midnight on the 28th day of every leap year, February, the figures "29" flash on the dial. This watch also strikes the hour regularly. The cost of making it was $10,000.

Burns, in Rage, Defends Course

McLean was a special agent then, so that he must have been commissioned earlier.

Asked about the famous telegram in which he was charged with having Mrs. Duckstein 'tip' McLean that he (McLean) was being investigated Burns said:

"I sent for her and told her one of our boys had told me that one of our lawyers had told him that inquiries were being made regarding McLean being an agent for the bureau.

"I suggested that she might inform her husband and let him suggest to McLean that he resign because he might embarrass the attorney general.

"I said not to suggest it to McLean but her husband could suggest it. How else could I do it"?

"You could have communicated directly."

"Well, I didn't want to do it that way."

"Who told you that an investigation was being made of whether McLean was an agent?"

"W. H. Grimes, a lawyer in our department."

"Why didn't you communicate with McLane?"

"I didn't have the right to ask McLean to resign but I could suggest it. There's nothing mysterious in my actions."

Washington, March 4.—Mrs. William O. Duckstein, pretty and apparently self-possessed, took the witness stand in the senate's oil investigation today, and admitted that she is an agent of the department of justice, that she had been supplied with a code book by William J. Burns, chief of the department's secret service, and that she had sent her husband, an employe of E. B. McLean, telegrams in the departmental code.

She declined to identify, however, the famous "Mary" message, in which McLean was tipped by Burns that he was under investigation by the department.

Senator Lenroot announced upon convening he would be absent the remainder of the week and Senator Ladd, Republican, North Dakota, was chosen to act as chairman.

William J. Burns, head of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice; William O. Duckstein, McLean's secretary; and the latter's wife, Mrs. Mary Duckstein, one of Burns's investigators, were waiting to be called when the committee met.

Mrs. Duckstein and Burns sat side by side on a divan, laughing and conversing. Mrs. Duckstein, first woman to figure conspicuously in the investigation was attractively frocked, wore a blue basket hat trimmed in white and white coral beads.

In explanation of the correspondence Walsh made this statement to the committee:

"It is probably not unknown to the members of the committee that an efford has been in progress for a month or more to discover something that might be urged calumniously or otherwise against me and hamper the work of the committee.

"I assume that circulation of the report that I have been in communication with Mr. Doheny was in furtherance of the effort."

Walsh also explained that the telegram from Doheny was found in the batch of telegrams furnished the committee last week but which the committee held at that time not to be relevant to the inquiry.

"This telegram" Walsh said, "is from Los Angeles. The committee asked for no telegrams from Los Angeles but from Palm Beach and Washington.

"Somebody busied himself to drag this in."

H. F. Taff, manager of the Western Union, was called to explain why the telegram was sent to the committee. Taff said the "subpoena was a dragnet that called for all telegrams sent by Doheny." He submitted the subpoena to prove his contention.

Burns, and Mr. and Mrs. Duckstein, sitting together at the rear of the committee table, smiled when Michael Friedman, the army expert, read the famous "Mary" message.

"What particular code was used?" asked Walsh.

"They had been encoded in accord with a department of justice code book that I obtained from Mr. Burns."

Friedman said the Doheny message was a private code, not related to the department of justice code.

He said a decode of the Doheny code was furnished by Senator Walsh's office. He added that the paraphrase from Walsh was "substantially the same as I found in decoding the message."

In reply to questions Mrs. Duckstein identified herself as an agent of the department of justice and formerly confidential secretary to Burns.

Senator Walsh asked her if she sent her husband a telegram on February 2, such as had been read into the record.

"I sent my husband a telegram," she said petulantly, "but it was not the very garbled one that has been in the papers. Words were left out that changed the whole meaning."

Walsh stalked around the table and laid a sheaf of paper before her.

"This is the copy of the original code message as it came to the committee," he said. "Is that the one you sent?"

She looked at it and then angrily replied:

"I can't say. I wouldn't say unless I saw the one I sent."

Walsh went back to his seat. Mrs. Duckstein refused to admit definitely that the decoded message was correct. She insisted that the word "as" should precede the phrase "special agent department justice."

Later when Walsh, went over the message word by word she insisted that three words "regarding him being" should have preceded "special agent department of justice."

"The people at the other end know what I meant," she added hotly.

"Yes but the message doesn't say 'regarding him being,'" replied Walsh.

"That's what I had in mind." she said.

Mrs. Duckstein said Burns called her to his office and asked her to tell her husband that perhaps McLean would care to resign from the department if an investigation of McLean likely to prove embarrassing to the attorney general.

"Did Burns tell you why he thought it important information "

"No, except he thought McLean might resign and he thought it might be embarrassing to the attorney general to have him as a special agent.

"Your real name is Jesse and yet the message is signed Mary. Why is that?"

"A few of my intimate friends call me Mary."

Mrs. Duckstein said the code used was "obsolete" and that she was not familiar with previous department of justice code.

Walsh asked her about a telegram sent by John F. Major to McLean.

When Walsh began reading a telegram purporting to outline a telephone conversation between herself and the "Duck," Mrs. Duckstein made her replies between outbursts of laughter in which spectators joined.

The conversation ascribed to "the Duck" was to the effect that he "had them where he wanted them," and would "make them bow to me."

"Did your husband tell you that he 'had them where he wanted them?'" Walsh asked.

"Certainly not," the witness answered with a titter.

"Did he tell you he'd make 'them' bow to him"?

"No" Mrs. Duckstein stifled her laughter with a small, square, blue handkerchief. Then she added:

"If he had told me anything like that, I'd certainly remember it."

The allusion to her husband as "the Duck" seemed to provoke her mirth.

"Have you had anything to do with the appointment of special agents?"

"No."

"Do you know anything about your husband having possession of the department of justice code?"

"No."

EVIDENCE TO JURY IN HARRIS DIVORCE CASE

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

New York, March 4.—Final evidence in the suit of Beverly D. Harris, former vice-president of the National City Bank, to annul his marriage to Eleanor Elaine Lee, southern beauty, was presented to the jury this morning and counsel immediately began summing up.

A Young Wag.

Father was explaining a not unusual winter sight. "You see, my son, the water in the river is so much warmer than the air that the vapor rises from it." "I guess," said Johnny, "I'd be warm, too, if I'd run as far as that river has."—Boston Transcript.

RADIO AND PHONOGRAPH ARE BARRED ON SUNDAY

Law of 1798 Still on Jersey Statute Books and Must Be Obeyed, Says Court.

A New Jersey Sunday blue law which was adopted in 1798 must be enforced to the letter, Supreme Court Justice James F. Minturn told the Hudson county grand jury. This law makes even playing a phonograph on Sunday illegal. However, if the offender is indicted, tried and convicted, the maximum penalty is a fine of $1.

This situation was created a month ago when the Jersey City motion picture theaters started operating on Sunday. In many other towns in the state the theater owners had never observed the law.

Sunday movies have been bitterly opposed by church elements in Jersey City, particularly by the Lord's Day Alliance and the New Jersey Society for the Promotion of Morals and the Suppression of Crime. Directing their attack chiefly at the theaters, a group of churchmen called on Justice Minturn.

The justice, who several years ago headed the Liberal Sunday league, referred to the theaters, but instructed the jurors to indict "all other violators" and told them they should be actuated "not by what the law should be but by what is the law."

He directed the jury to seek evidence against "saloons which are selling worse than poison; drug stores, groceries, bootblack establishments, confectionery and refreshment stores, clothing and shoe stores, private amusement parks, ballrooms and concert halls."

"With the wisdom, policy and expediency of these laws you and I are not concerned," he said in his charge. "Our duty is done when as the sworn representatives of the law we apply ourselves to the execution of their provisions."

He directed the jurors to indict the theater managers and operators on the evidence to be submitted, to order police executives to submit names and addresses "of all other violators," and to make use of their own knowledge of "Blue Law" violations in their own neighborhoods.

The statute adopted in 1798 was called an "Act for the Suppression of Vice and Immorality." It prohibits "any worldly business or employment" on Sunday. Its specific prohibition of theatrical performances, concerts, etc., is so broad it is believed strict enforcement would outlaw Sunday use of phonographs or radio receiving sets.

overnor Recommends That State's Credit be Used—Must Amend Constitution—Cites Forsythe Disaster.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, March 4.—Belief was ex- ssed at the capitol today that the ommendations for the elimination grade crossings, made by Gover- Smith in a special message to legislature last night, would be opted by the lawmakers.

The governor recommended that state's constitution be amended permit the state to loan its credit the railroads and municipalities that their share of the cost of minations may be financed in the instance by the state.

"In the last analysis," the gov- or said, "this means that while state lends her credit she only rs the 25 per cent share of the mination as now provided by law, does it with the proceeds of nds rather than by annual appro- iation from the current revenues the state. This, it seems to me, sound from a business standpoint cause the grade crossing elimina- n is a permanent improvement tined to outlive the bonds."

The governor also recommended t the entire responsibility for pre- ring, ordering and supervising a mplete grade crossing elimination ogram for the territory north of w York city, indicating the order d importance of the elimination ould be placed squarely upon the partment of public works where it longs."

In New York city, the governor uld have the board of estimate d apportionment be the agency of e state to initiate and carry out e grade crossing elimination pro- am

"Since a constitutional amend- ent is necessary in order to extend e state credit in this field," the vernor said, "I propose that this nstitutional amendment shall also t behind the grade crossing elimi- tion the greatest possible power at can be given to the state to minate delays and to require the ilroads to carry out elimination ders. We do not tolerate long de- rs in removing menaces to health. he menace to life and limb in grade ossings is no less important."

The governor said he was con- nced that the present state pro- am for grade crossing elimination entirely inadequate."

In order that the lawmakers might ve an example of this, the gover- r illustrated the Forsythe, N. Y., ossing where the Twentieth Cen- ry Limited was wrecked last De- mber, killing nine persons. He owed where the public service mmission had ordered this crossing minated on January 14, 1922, and at up to the present time nothing s been done except to have it gued in the courts.

"This case shows clearly the de- ys and obstructions in the elimina- n of dangerous crossings," the vernor said.

Cocoanut Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Many soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much free alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this cannot possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. Two or three teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excess oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and a few ounces will last everyone in the family for months.

Sunday School League Results

Saturday night three Senior Sunday School League games were played at the Y. M. C. A. There were about 150 people at the games.

The first game was fast and tight from start to finish. The Trinity M. E. quintet led for the most part of the game, but the sinkers of Fox, the forward of the Redeemer five, brought the score up to a tie and then four points ahead. There were quite a few fouls made in the game due to the hard playing of both teams. For the last minute or two the Redeemer five was forced to play with only four men. Fox and Karl Messinger starred for the winners with 16 and 7 points respectively. Bailey and Smith starred for the Trinity quintet with 11 and 9 points respectively. It's Unusual—but so is the file

Suppose you wanted to file—
Letters—or Cap size sheets and 6 x 4 Cards
5 x 3 Cards Folded Documents Legal Blanks (filed flat)

In one four-drawer file. It might be considered an unusual requirement but you would have no trouble in meeting it in an Art Metal Steel File. It would be accomplished by simply substituting drawers as needed to give you just the filing facilities desired.

But perhaps your records are not only varied but large in numbers. In that case you owe it to yourself to investigate the twenty-two styles that compose this standard line of upright unit files.

There's a file in Art Metal for every record from a two-inch ticket to an eighteen-inch drawing—and they all intermember as a handsome uniform battery whether you have two or two hundred.

See the complete file on display at our stores or phone us for literature
